Readers Theatre

Captain: Are we near land yet?

Sailor: From down here I can't see any land on the horizon.

Captain: Let me hoist you up to the top of the mast so you can see.

Sailor: I think I see a harbor, but it keeps disappearing in the waves.

Captain: I see it now. It looks like the old pier that they restored.

Sailor: The wharf sure looks glamorous. Are you sure we're in the right place?

Captain: Yes, just be courageous a little longer and we'll be there.

Sailor: I'll play a soothing song on my flute.

Captain: It sure is hot. I'm going to slump down on the deck under the shadow of the sail.

Sailor: Ahoy! We're getting closer. I can see the statue of Davy Jones in front of the fortress with the cannons.

Captain: Steer the ship into the port near the dock.

Sailor: Great we're here. I'm starved. What does that sign say?

Captain: "Patio dining is full. Please go around to the sail thru."

Sailor: Man, after a thunderous voyage like we just had, I want to go into the restaurant.

Captain: There's nothing we can do. Sail up to the speaker.

Sailor: Aye, aye captain. Order me three cheeseburgers with everything, two large fries, a vanilla shake, and a banana split.

Captain: That sounds good. I'll order the same. You want to split some onion rings too?

Sailor: No thanks; I'm on a diet.
